Sprays Should Be Applied For Stickweed Control

Farmers who are having trouble with stickweed should take heart. There's a way to control it, say weed specialists at VPI.

Spraying stickweed with 2,4-D can be done any time from late June until about the time for the flowers to bloom in August. If the spraying is done too soon, some shoots may not have emerged and will not receive any spray. The plants, however, should be actively growing for best results.

Stickweed has relatively broad, light green leaves that are placed opposite on the stalk. It is prevalent on well-drained ridges, as well as in moist places. Details on its control are available from county agents, or from the VPI Agricultural Extension Service, Blacksburg.
